Some great tutorials can be found at or at . PhotoShop Express is a free program that Adobe offers for those who wish to run their projects on a Mac without Adobe's other, more-advanced tools. Chapter 4 is an Adobe-oriented introduction to PhotoShop Express. Adobe gives a layer-based model for image editing, meaning that all edits are applied to a single layer. If you apply an adjustment, then you have to apply it to every image in your project. Make sure that you save your projects before you make your edits. Batch Processing If you need a quick fix on a large batch of files, then you need to resort to batch processing. Adobe has a Batch Processor software product that can process multiple images. Adobe's page about Batch Processing has all the details you need on how to use the product. If your software doesn't include a batch processor, you can use your operating system's built-in features to apply the same adjustments to multiple images, whether the images are in one folder or multiple. Managing the layer hierarchy The foundation of PhotoShop's image editing is the Layer Styles group, which contains multiple compositing (overlying) and basic editing options such as Stabilize, Envelope, Defringe, and Sharpen. In Figure 2-1, you see the default Layer Styles group that comes preconfigured with Photoshop. Figure 2-1: The default Layer Styles group in Photoshop. Photoshop offers many other layer settings through the use of Layer Styles. As your image manipulations become more complex, you'll want to use more than the default Layer Styles options to achieve your desired results. Understanding color modes Most images that you view on your computer screen or print them out, have a color mode. The color mode is essentially how the pixel colors are represented, and it determines what colors you will see in your images. The color modes that you see most often are RGB (Red, Green, and Blue) and CMYK (Cyan, Magenta, Yellow, and Key), as shown in Figure 2-2. Figure 2-2: RGB and CMYK color modes. RGB is a 24-bit color mode. RGB stands for Red, Green, and Blue. You can see 24

What's New In?

The invention relates to heating devices, especially for domestic appliances. Such devices include a heat generator element in order to apply heat to an object to be heated (e.g., food in a food appliance) and a method for supplying heat from a heat generator element. Heating devices are known wherein a heating device is arranged in a heating chamber and wherein said heating device includes a heat generator element, such as a heating coil, which is mechanically fixed to a cross bar or an auxiliary component connected to the cross bar. These components are installed in the housing of the heat generator element and are mechanically connected to one another or, as the case may be, connected to a base component with a central positioning in such a manner that the heating coil is suspended within the heating chamber. With heating devices of this type, the heating chamber has a base and at least one cover part which, on the one hand, closes the base and, on the other hand, supports the heating coil, which is in the form of a heating coil plate, and the heat generator element, which is usually a so-called heating coil. These components can be connected to one another by elements such as screws, which are inserted through the connecting points or through connecting holes provided on the base or on the cover part. These connecting points also receive the heat generator element in order to fix it at the connecting points. The base and cover part are typically connected to one another by gluing and they may additionally be screwed together. For example, in order to connect the cover part to the base, screws may be provided which extend through bores provided in the base of the heating chamber and are subsequently anchored in holes in the cover part. An alternative possibility is to provide a retaining element, which encompasses the base and the cover part and which receives the connecting points via snap-in elements provided on the connecting points. DE 20 2004 014 597 U1 relates to an electrical heating device in which the cover part, which closes the base, is formed by a spring leaf. The spring leaf covers the base and is connected to the base of the heat generator element by means of a screw connection. The spring leaf includes a tab on the top side, which is opposite the spring surface, in order to receive a screw connection element. The screw connection element connects the base and the spring leaf. The electrical heating device is able to be used as a hob, in which case the cover part is preferably formed by the hob. In this case the cover part is connected to the
